Alister has experience working with clients from every corner of the industry, from designers to installers. After working with hundreds of architects on an impressive range of projects, Alister is well positioned to provide specialist acoustic advice on almost any kind of project.

Before working as an acoustic engineer, Alister was as an architectural consultant for interior fitouts throughout New Zealand, applying his experience in Building Science to guide excellent design.

Alister is interested in exploring the complex and intriguing ways different elements of design interact. This considers the impact of considerations such as seismic design, material selection, sustainability, and construction – each informing how we look at acoustic design for a space.

He brings this holistic view, along with his experience providing expert acoustic advice to projects of all shapes and sizes, to every project he works on to solve problems and create better spaces.
